The Ridge Affordable Housing Post-Occupancy Analysis

Presenter:

Katie Sunderlin, Senior Affordable Housing Coordinator, Housing and Community Vitality Department
Steve Posey, Chief Housing Officer, Housing and Community Vitality Department

Summary:

This informational item systematically analyzes the impact of The Ridge, an affordable housing development, on the neighboring community across four distinct categories: traffic, crime, property values, and test scores. The examination yielded objective insights into the development's influence, encompassing observations on local traffic dynamics, crime rates, property valuations, and standardized test scores.

The primary goal of undertaking this analysis was to gain a localized understanding of the quantifiable impact of affordable housing developments on the community's most vocalized concerns. Specifically focusing on increased traffic, elevated crime rates, diminished property values, and reduced test scores, the investigation conducted by the Housing and Community Vitality Department aims to provide valuable insights into the actual impact of affordable housing on these specific areas of public concern.

Background:

Affordable and attainable housing continues to be a high priority concern for residents of the City of Colorado Springs. Between 2018-2022, there has been a 17% increase in household formation in our region, exerting pressure to expand the city's housing inventory at multiple price points. As housing costs continue to rise, there has been a 143% increase in the number of households of moderate income (80% - 120% of Area Median Income) that are cost-burdened. Jobs in this income band include finance and banking positions, computer systems analysts and administrators, accountants, and mid-level management.

Housing & Community Vitality staff continue to work with for-profit and non-profit developers to bring housing into our region that is well-aligned with a range of income levels. City Council has supported these efforts by approving the Department's Annual Action Plan to the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), by approving a 1st of its kind development fee rebate program in collaboration with Colorado Springs Utilities, by approving a sales tax refund for qualified affordable housing projects, and by voting to carry forward the City's annual allocation of private activity bonds, a form of tax-exempt financing that is used to accomplish qualified multi-family developments across the community.

After passage of Proposition 123, which created a new source of funding for affordable and attainable housing in Colorado, the city's leadership made an ongoing commitment to increasing the affordable and attainable housing inventory by an average of 758 units annually, or 2274 units over the next three years.

Previous Council Action:

City Council held a public hearing on an appeal of the administrative approval for The Ridge on February 27, 2018. The appeal was denied, allowing the project to move forward.

Financial Implications:

Tax-exempt bonds and federal and state grant funds are the single largest sources of financing for affordable and attainable housing in our community. When paired with low-income housing tax credits administered by the Colorado Housing Finance Authority (CHFA), the city has successfully contributed to the development of housing that meets a variety of needs, including individuals exiting homelessness, working families filling essential service economy jobs, and increasingly, entry level professionals. Federal and state resources are leveraged to expand the city's housing inventory, particularly for households below 80% AMI. In 2023, the use of $3.2M in federal and state dollars resulted in 5 project closings totaling 600 units and approximately $141M in economic impact.
