

Aimee Cox serves as the Chief Housing and Homelessness Officer for the City of Colorado Springs, where she leads strategic efforts to address housing affordability and homelessness across the community. A Colorado Springs native, Cox brings more than 20 years of experience in public service, including prior roles with the City as Community Development Manager and as the City Council's first administrator. She has also held national leadership positions, including Chief Impact and Strategy Officer for the San Diego Regional Task Force on Homelessness. Known for her collaborative, data-driven approach, Cox works closely with government, nonprofit, and community partners to expand housing solutions, strengthen systems of care, and improve outcomes for residents experiencing housing instability.
